> LA PLATA: THE ARGENTINE CONFEDERATION,

PARAGUAY.

Being a Narrative of the Exploration of the Tributaries of the River La Plata and Adjacent Countries, during the years 1853, 1854, 1815 and 1856, under the orders of the United States Government.
By Thomas J. Page, U. S. N.,

Commander of the Expedition.
With Map and numerous Engravings. Svo Muslin, #3. This Volume contains the Official Narrative of one of the most important Expeditions ever sent out by our Government. The vast region drained by the River La Plata and its tributaries was closed to commerce and navigation by the rigid Colonial Laws of Spain, the civil wars which followed the Independence, and the subsequent selfish policy of Rosse, the tyrant of Buenos Ayres. After the defeat and flight of Rosas, one of the first acts of Urquiza, the able and collightened Director of the Argentine Confederation, was the decree of August 23, 1852, declaring the waters of the Confederation free to the flags of all nations. Our Government was the first to avail itself of this decree Early in 1853 the steamer Water Witch was placed under the mand of Lieut. Page, with instructions to explore the Rivers of La Plata, and report upon their navigability and adaptation to commerce. Lieut. Page executed his commission with rare fidelity and intelligence, and has embodied the results in this volume. The explorations described in the Narrative embrace an extent of 3,600 miles of river navigation, and 4,400 miles of pourney by land in Paraguay and the Argentine Confederation. The River Paraguay alone was found to be navigable, at low water, by a steamer drawing nine feet, for more than 2,000 miles to that of the Mississippi, and not inferior in salubrity of climate and fertility of soil, while the head waters of its rivers penetrate the richest mineral provinces of Brazil and Bolivia. The pro incts of this region must find their outlet through the River La Plata. The population numbers scarcely one person to a square mile, but great inducements to emigration are now offered by the Argentine Confederation. The commerce of the country, already considerable, is capable of immediate and almost in Lient. Page's Narrative contains ample information respecting the soil, climate and productions of the country, and the man-ners, habits and customs of the people. An interesting and valuable account of the Jesuit Missions in La Plata is appended to the Narrative. The Illustrations comprise the accurate Map of the Country prepared by the orders of our Government, Portraits of Urquiza, Lopez, Francia, and Loyola, and numerous Engravings of Scenery, Character and Incident.
